The Treehouse School

Learning how to press apples for juice

Sad but True

Last week I heard on the news that 50,000 teachers leave the profession every year. Reasons cited for this were that the Government has made teaching unsustainable; pay is not comparable with other profession, and teachers' workloads have reached an untenable level. Coupled with the Government's continual changes to educational policy, at great cost to the tax payer I might add, and the vast numbers of children and young people who dislike school, I do wonder when somebody in a position of power will work out that the system has had it. Meanwhile, unhappy teachers and disaffected pupils will go through the motions, until the time comes when they can escape. What a dismal picture...

Welcoming, Interested and Delicious!

Hello Treehouse Gang. Thank you for inviting me to your happy school today to demonstrate how to press apples.

There are three things I'd like to comment on. Firstly thank you all for welcoming Elspeth (Andy's grandchild) and being with her to show her round and play with her. Secondly thank you for being so interested in the apple pressing, for asking great questions and making eye contact. The new words were the hopper and the scrapper. You also showed great estimating and maths skills - especially working out how many apples are needed to make a litre of juice. Thirdly food - thank you for a delicious lunch, and for bringing seconds Will.

With best wishes, Andy King (Visitor)

Keeping You and Your Child in the Loop...Developmental Learning

Learning is an incredibly complex and interesting subject. As you are probably aware, at The Treehouse we teach children according to their stage of development (where they have got to), not their age (where we think they should have got to). It occurred to me it would be worth exploring this further so that you understand why we have made this decision. Educationalist and Friend of The Treehouse, Julie Fisher writes:

'The construction of a child's learning has many parallels with the construction of a traditional wooden jigsaw puzzle. At first, the pieces of the child's 'learning jigsaw' are picked seemingly at random. Sometimes the piece fits straight away, sometimes it is turned round and round with astonishing patience - before the fit is finally made. Sometimes a fit is made and only subsequent pieces show that piece to be in the wrong place. Sometimes the piece is turned round and round, does not quite fit but is jammed in anyway because it is more satisfying for the learner to have reached a solution than to start again. It is the skill of the educator (parent, grandparent, coach, tutor or teacher) to be aware of the pieces of the jigsaw that the child already has in place, and whether or not they have been fitted together appropriately.

If we ignore this, we are ignoring a child's stage of development. Imposing connections can lead to the learner becoming confused. It would be like picking a child up from a stepping stone and placing them far away down the stream, leaving them powerless to know where they are, how they got there, or how they could use that pathway again. Choosing instead, (as we do at The Treehouse) to support connections between existing understanding and new understanding can speed some children in certain situations more swiftly towards their personal learning objectives.'

I found this analogy really helpful; I hope that it is of interest to you too.

Looking for something to do at home....

Learner Smarties:

Trees: Share your Learning Log with a parent, reading and responding to the entries that have been made. Perhaps you might like to add another entry?

Number Smarties:

How much will you sell your apple sale products for? Can you work out the cost of the ingredients? How much does your product sell for in the shops?

Practically Smarties:

Think about how you can package your apple sale products so that they keep your product fresh, look attractive and are environmentally friendly too. Can you add some information, facts, labels? Look at other products to get some ideas.

Word Smarties:

Apprentices: Practise your handwriting and the spelling of the high frequency words with two ascenders.

Read a book so that you can add a 'leaf' to our Reading Tree.

Golden mentions to all members of The Gang This week...

Houtstanding Houses: For demonstrating great control and decision making when cycling.

Awesome Apprentices: For walking to Brightwell with such positive attitudes.

Treemendous Trees: For their excellent Log Book entries.
